On the Changing of Principles.

Our esteemed Canadian contempo has been moved by Mr. Wilson's recent speeches, particularly those tribute to him a certain lack of per-The Mail and Empire says:

"Consistency, it must be admitted, is not one of the virtues of President Wilson, and on more than one occasion he has been twitted with having changed his opinions and even his principles, with no explanation or apology."

Semething of the same sort has He said:

"The man who cannot change his mind gives evidence of profound ignorance-if your mind doesn't change when the world changes, you are no longer in harmony with the world. I'm willing to leave things alone if you will guarantee that I can go to bed and find them the same in the morning.

Almost any real philosopher could point out blindfold the fallacy in this attempted apology for wabbling with from Captain Winslow of Company regard to principles.

It is one thing to change one's mind in order to bring it honestly into harmony with new conditions of fact. It is another and a different thing to change one's avowed princi ples in order to bring the new conditions of fact into convenient accord with a personal and self-determined independent of either the discarded set of principles or the newly adopted eset of principles,

Surplus Capital Drafted Away From the Public's Needs.

Revenue law amendments are con mendable when they eliminate petty and vexatious taxes which give trouble enough to the Government and to the public but yield little enough to make no mistake when they seek to get rid of such tax pests. But those who propose, like Representative Mc-LAUGHLIN of Nebraska, to replace the eliminated excise rates with very much higher income taxes and inherizance taxes, would better have a care es to what they may do to the enterprise, expansion and velocity of the country's industry and business.

One does not have to hold a brief for corporations to realize that if all their surplus earnings are gobbled up by the tax gatherer they must run to the banks every time they need capital to build a new plant, even to put a new roof on an old one. One does not have to feel commiseration for the rare Individual with an income of a couple of million dollars a year to comprehend that if the tax collector takes the greater part of it away from him, not merely is his incentive to go into new activities stiffed but his ability to do so is shackled. He will not have the surplus capital to search for new oil fields in the deserts and new mines in the wilderness. He will not have the surplus funds to risk as a gambler's chance in backing other new ventures.

One of the dangerous troubles with excessive taxation is that it absorbs the surplus capital with which all new and often doubtful ventures must be promoted, all old things made fresh, made bigger, made more productive, made more useful to a country and to its people.

At this very moment there is striking example, coming home to hundreds of thousands of American people, of what discomfort and hardship can be caused by the shovelling of pretty much all surplus earnings, surolus profits, surplus capital, into the

The Soldiers' Denial of the War Department's Statement.

When some 1.500 members of the 339th Infantry returned from Russia on Monday two of their officers made statements indicating that either there been observed by Mr. Wilson him- was no mutiny by men of that regiself; and a semi-explanation or semi-ment in the Archangel region last apology was once pronounced by him March or that the reports which in the course of an address delivered reached the United States at that In this town seven or eight years ago, time were badly twisted. Major J. B. NICHOLS put it this way:

> "I have heard more bunk about this alleged mutiny than could be written in a dozen books. The incident which gave rise to the rumors was a misunderstanding between a Sergeant and one of the privates. The men of the 339th are the best disciplined and the most courageous of any outfit I know, and all any officer could desire."

A more emphatic statement came 1, the company in which the mutiny was alleged to have occurred;

"The argument between the Sergeant and the private, which started the mutiny story, was a trivial incident. The non-commissioned officer ordered a Polish boy to load a truck. Because of his lack of knowledge of the English language, the boy misunderstood the Sergeant and refused to obey the orders which had been given to him. Later, after the order had been explained to him by officers of the company, the soldiers readily loaded the truck. That was the nearest to a mutiny that we had."

That they would not go to the front line positions was openly stated by the men, however, and they would only go to Obozerskaya. They also stated that general mutiny would soon come if there was not some definite statement forthcoming from Washington with regard to the removal of American troops from Russia at the earliest possible date."

Mr. LLOYD GEORGE brought to Loa don two skulls. One is the dome stolen by the Germans, of an African Sultan of unpronounceable name. The other is the skull of Mr. Wilson's declaration that self-determination must be permitted to all nations, great or small. This the Welshman took in the battle of Paris and he may write across the brow Mr. Wilson's later announcement that the Irish question is a domestic problem. It may stand on the mantelpiece in Downing street in front of a framed copy of the late Fourteen Points or Principles.

Small wonder, we say, that those who once yelled "Limehouse!" cried "Hurrah I" when LLOYD GROBGE came back to London with his trophies. The fact that the assent of the United States Senate is necessary to the completion of certain parts of his victory cannot detract from the Prime Minister's remarkable accomplishment. He did all he could do and he perhaps expects that Mr. Wilson will be able to consummate the programme.
